CAVES OF OOO

Dialogue in story order

A complete reading script of the authored conversations, with branching choices, optional stories and all four endings.

Read chapters 1–12 as progression toward the final choice. Chapters 13–16 are mutually exclusive endings. Chapters 17–18 hold ambient services and additional authored scenarios. Optional chapters can occur in another order during play.

D001-style labels identify dialogue nodes; player choices point to the next node. R001-style labels identify runtime variants and interactions. Availability notes are not spoken dialogue. Text in braces is supplied by the world or current quest state.

01 · Arrival in the Spread

Opening

The current fresh game begins in a Spread clearing, normally east of Sill. The clearing warden gives a geographic lead; field residents explain ordinary survival and useful places. This precedes the Sill omen.

D002 · Passing Through

Warden

Then pass through peacefully. We don't tolerate troublemakers here, but honest travelers are welcome. The elder can tell you more about the area if you need guidance.

Player 1: Thanks for the welcome.

Player 2: Farewell.
Conversation ends.

D003 · About Village

Warden

This is a small settlement, but we look after our own. The elder leads us, the merchant trades goods, and I keep watch. We've had our share of trouble from the wilds, but we endure.

Player 1: What kind of trouble?
Continue at D004 — Threats.

Player 2: Sounds like a good village.
Continue at D001 — Start.

Player 3: Farewell.
Conversation ends.

D004 · Threats

Warden

The usual -- beasts from the wilds, bandits on the roads. Lately the creatures have been bolder. Something's stirring them up. I've doubled my patrols, but one warden can only do so much.

Player 1: I could help deal with some of those threats.
Continue at D005 — Offer Help.

Player 2: What kind of creatures?
Continue at D006 — Creatures.

Player 3: Stay vigilant, warden.
Conversation ends.

D005 · Offer Help

Warden

A willing blade is always welcome. Clear out some of the beasts near the village and you'll have our gratitude -- and maybe a reward from the elder.

Player 1: Consider it done.
Conversation ends.

After this choice: The warden nods with respect.

Player 2: I'll see what I can do.
Continue at D001 — Start.

D006 · Creatures

Warden

Depends on where you are. Near the caves it's marlbacks and bats. The desert has scorpions and bandits. The jungle is full of spiders and vipers. And the old ruins... I don't like to think about what lurks in the ruins.

Player 1: I can handle myself.

D018 · Stirred

Elder

I am old, wanderer. Old enough to remember when the caves were just caves -- cold stone, blind creatures, dripping water. Something changed, years ago. A tremor in the earth, but not like any earthquake. The ground didn't shake. It... shifted. Like the world was turning in its sleep. After that, the caves became different.

Player 1: Different how?

Player 2: Back to my other questions.
Continue at D016 — Start.

D019 · Different How

Elder

The mushrooms came first. Growing in places nothing should grow -- through stone, through metal, through the walls of the mine. Then the lights. Faint blue glimmers deep in the tunnels, like reflections of something that isn't there. And then the creatures. Not the marlbacks -- those came later. I mean the things that think. The things that speak.

D020 · Elder Choir

Elder

The Rot Choir... so that is their name. I have heard them, wanderer. Late at night, when the wind is still, you can put your ear to the ground and hear... singing. Not voices, exactly. Something deeper. Like the earth itself is humming a tune. It started the same year as the tremor. The village has been uneasy ever since.

Player 1: The Choir is a mycelial consciousness. They grew from the cataclysm.
Continue at D021 — Elder Understands.

Player 2: Are they a threat to the village?
Continue at D025 — Elder Threat.

Player 3: Back to my other questions.
Continue at D016 — Start.

D021 · Elder Understands

Elder

A consciousness... in the fungus. I have lived a long life and thought I had seen the strangest the world had to offer. I was wrong. If what you say is true, then the caves beneath us are not just caves. They are the body of a thinking being. And we have been living on its skin.

Player 1: That's one way to look at it.
Continue at D022 — Elder Processing.

Player 2: They're not hostile. At least, not yet.
Continue at D025 — Elder Threat.

D022 · Elder Processing

Elder
I need time to absorb this. But I am grateful you told me, wanderer. Knowledge, even frightening knowledge, is better than ignorance. The village will need to... adjust its understanding of the ground we stand on.

Player 1: There are other factions too. The Recension, the Concord, others.

Player 1: There are five factions, each with different views on the cataclysm.
Continue at D024 — Elder Five Factions.

Player 2: It's complicated. I'll explain as I learn more.

D024 · Elder Five Factions

Elder
Five factions... The Choir you've told me about. And four others? This is larger than I imagined. The world truly has changed, and we've been sitting up here on the surface, thinking it was just marlbacks and bad harvests. Tell me about the others when you can, wanderer. This old man still has much to learn.

Player 1: I will. Live and drink, elder.
Conversation ends.

Player 2: Back to my other questions.
Continue at D016 — Start.

D025 · Elder Threat

Elder
That is the question that keeps an elder awake at night. If they are aware, can they be reasoned with? Can we live alongside a thinking forest that grows beneath our homes? Or will it one day decide we are in the way? I do not know. But I would rather face the answer than hide from the question.

Player 1: From what I've seen, they can be reasoned with.
Continue at D016 — Start.

Player 2: I'll learn more and come back.
Continue at D016 — Start.

D026 · Elder Temporal

Elder

Temporal distortions? You speak of things beyond an old man's understanding. But I have seen what you describe. Time moving strangely in the deeper tunnels. A miner once went down for an hour and came back insisting he'd been gone for a week. His beard agreed with him. If you know what causes this, I would hear it.

Player 1: The world's binding is thinning. Names slip loose in the deep places.
Continue at D027 — Elder Substrate Simple.

Player 2: There's an order of scribes who keep the world's memory. They call themselves the Recension.
Continue at D028 — Elder Palimpsest.

Player 3: I'm still figuring it out myself.
Continue at D016 — Start.

D027 · Elder Substrate Simple

Elder

The foundation of reality... cracked. Like a pot with a flaw in the clay. And through the cracks, time seeps out. That would explain the miner. It would explain old Mara's vision. It would explain many things I have struggled to understand these past years. You carry heavy knowledge, wanderer.

Player 1: There are factions who understand it better than I do.
Continue at D023 — Elder More Factions.

Player 2: I'll share more when I understand more.
Continue at D016 — Start.

D028 · Elder Palimpsest

Elder

Scribes who keep everything? That is... I don't have a word for what that is. Wonderful? Terrible? Both? If everything we have ever done is written down somewhere, then every moment of this village is on a shelf a stranger can take down and read. I find that both comforting and deeply unsettling.

Player 1: They're not spying, exactly. More like... remembering.

D029 · About Caves

The caves of the valley stretch deep beneath the earth. Strange things dwell down there -- things older than our village. But there is treasure too, for those brave enough to seek it. In recent years, the strangeness has been... growing. Literally and otherwise.

D033 · Marlback Scrabbler Deeper

Elder
Fleeing? You mean the marlbacks aren't raiding us out of malice? They're running from something? That... changes things. If the caves are pushing creatures to the surface, the problem is not the creatures. The problem is what drives them.

Player 1: The Rot Choir's growth may be displacing them.
Continue at D034 — Marlback Scrabbler Choir.

Player 2: Something is expanding in the deep caves. It's complicated.

D034 · Marlback Scrabbler Choir

A growing consciousness, displacing creatures upward to our doorstep. So the marlbacks are refugees, in a sense. That does not make them less dangerous, but it does make them less evil. Thank you for this perspective, wanderer. It will change how we deal with them.

D035 · Factions

Elder

Factions in the deep caves? I have heard whispers from travelers -- talk of living fungus, time spirits, glass-scarred wanderers. I thought they were fever-dreams from too long underground. You are telling me they are real?

Continue at D024 — Elder Five Factions.

Player 2: The world beneath us is more complex than anyone on the surface realizes.
Continue at D036 — Elder Complex.

D036 · Elder Complex

Elder

I have always suspected as much. An elder learns to listen to the ground. It has been speaking a different language these past years. I am too old to go down there myself, but you... you walk between worlds. The village -- all the surface folk -- need someone who can understand what is happening below. Will you keep us informed?

Player 1: I will. You deserve to know.
Continue at D016 — Start.

Player 2: I'll do my best.
Continue at D016 — Start.

D037 · Elder Substrate

Elder

The Thinning... I have heard the word before. My grandmother spoke of the world's holding -- she was a miner before the village was a village. She said the old-timers called the deep root 'the floor beneath the floor.' The thing that holds everything else up. If that is failing, as you say... no wonder the world has been strange.

Player 1: There are three ways this is said to end. The world gathered, the world kept, or the world renewed.
Continue at D038 — Elder Three Endings.

Player 2: Your grandmother was wiser than she knew.

D038 · Elder Three Endings

Elder

Three endings? You speak of the fate of the world as though it hangs in the balance. And perhaps it does. Gathered... kept... renewed. Tell me -- which do you intend to pursue?

D039 · Elder Bridge

Elder

The path where nothing is lost. That is the way of wisdom, if it can be found. This old man has seen too much lost in his lifetime. The idea that there is a path where the new world and the old can coexist... it gives me hope I had thought extinguished. Walk that path, wanderer. Walk it for all of us.

Player 1: I'll try.
Conversation ends.

After this choice: The elder's eyes shine with something you haven't seen in them before: hope.

D040 · Elder Undecided

Elder

Then decide carefully. The world has had enough of hasty decisions. Take your time, learn what you can, and when the moment comes, trust what you have learned. That is the best advice this old man can give.

Player 1: Thank you, elder.
Continue at D016 — Start.

D041 · Elder Burden

Elder

No one asks for the weight they carry. But you carry it nonetheless. And the fact that you carry it with open eyes and honest doubt tells me the world could do worse than to place its fate in your hands. Go well, wanderer.

D043 · Oven Hint

Elder Well

The oven, wanderer. It cracked weeks ago and no one here knows the old builder's art. I kept a guide from the original mason — take it. You'll also need fire clay, the red powder you sometimes find in the deep caves. And if you come across a mending rite, that might hold the cracks long enough to buy time.

The watch lantern... yes. The old warden kept it burning with a special oil — ward oil, he called it. I have his recipe, but the ingredients come from the caves. Take it, and ask the warden to help. There's also a kindle rite in the village chest that might coax the flame back temporarily.

D048 · Well Trouble

Elder Well

It started with a bitterness no one could ignore. Then the children took sick to their stomachs and the watervines lost their sweetness. The keeper says the water comes up wrong after every heavy draw, like the old filtration ring beneath the shaft has cracked.

Simple. I lend, you fight, you bring the steel back. The price is in ink -- one part in four of what the blade would cost outright. Bring it back unbroken and I'll refund half the ink, no questions. Don't bring it back, and you keep the blade and I keep the ink. Lose it on the dying ground and we're both poorer.

Ah, you've got an eye for the rare stuff, eh? Occasionally I get things from deep delvers. Strange metals, crystals that hum when you touch them. Even had a blade once that the seller swore was grown, not forged. Made from some kind of hardened fungus. Sold it fast -- gave me the creeps.

D121 · Merchant Choir

Merchant

Rot Choir? Is that what the mushroom folk are called? I've had a few traders who smelled like old earth try to sell me things. Good quality, I'll admit, but the merchandise always seems to... settle. Like it's trying to put down roots in my shop. Bad for inventory turnover, that.

Alive? Well, that explains the one that started sprouting. I threw it in the compost heap. Probably shouldn't have done that, in retrospect. Too late now. The compost heap has been unusually productive lately, come to think of it...

Unusual? Depends on your definition. I've had customers who spoke in riddles, customers whose shadows didn't match their movements, and one fellow who paid entirely in memories -- don't ask me how that works, but I found myself knowing how to shoe a horse afterward, which I'd never learned. Trade is trade.

Concerning is one word for it. The shadow fell in the wrong direction, like their light was coming from somewhere else. Somewhere that wasn't quite here. They bought a lot of glass. Wouldn't say why. Paid in drams and didn't make small talk. My kind of customer, honestly.

The Glassblown Remnant? Well, the glass purchases make more sense now. They did have a slightly... glassy look about them, now that I think about it. Tinker

All sorts. Power cells, circuitry, mechanical components. Most of it is corroded beyond use, but every now and then you find something that still works. I found a heating coil last month that's older than this village. Still hums when you touch it. The old world built things to last -- they just didn't build themselves to last.

D140 · Old World

Tinker

Nobody knows for sure. The elder says the world 'broke.' I've seen the evidence in the tech -- scorch marks that go right through solid metal, circuits fused in patterns that don't make physical sense. Whatever happened, it wasn't a war or a plague. It was something stranger. Something that changed the rules.

The substrate of reality? That would explain... a lot, actually. The way some salvage seems to exist in two states at once, or how certain metals have grain patterns that loop back on themselves. Deeper? I've only been to the upper levels myself. But I've heard stories from the few who've gone further down. Strange machinery embedded in the cave walls. Warm stones that pulse like a heartbeat. The Rot Choir? You mean the mushrooms have a name? And they're... alive? Thinking? Well, that explains why the salvage near those growths always feels warm. And why my tools corrode faster when I work near spore-heavy areas. I'll be more careful down there.

Player 1: Good idea.

D148 · Old Tech

Tinker

I found a piece once that bothered me for weeks. A small metal disc, perfectly smooth, no seams, no screws. When I held it to my ear, I could hear... voices? Not real voices. More like echoes of voices, layered on top of each other. I buried it in my yard. Couldn't sleep with it in the workshop.

East ruins, third level down. Near a section of wall that's been fused into glass. I didn't go back to that spot. The air there tasted like copper and old memories. If that makes any sense.

Come here, you'll want this one before you walk east. Bandfrogs. Three of them, nested in the east cut right where the good peat is, and every one louder than the dog. You've heard our dog, so you know what I'm telling you. Spade goes in, frog comes up. Nobody's cut out there in a fortnight, and the drying racks are as bare as a washed plate. Some years the Concord sends its pest man for thirty drams and a share of every rack after, and every year somebody says never again. Never again, never again, and then the racks are bare again.

There is water. Sit first; this keeps. Two nights ago a woman came in off the pans and claimed the cloth, and she is under it. I have not asked her business, and I will not before the third day. Her pursuers told me anyway, at the pole, loudly: she killed a man called Harl at the salt-scales, and they are his kin. Three of them are camped in the dry wash south of town. The oath holds them at the pole until the third day ends, and not one hour after. My clan keeps the oath. Nobody here will argue it, and nobody here will walk out to the wash for her. Someone not of my tent may. Hear one thing plainly, because it is law: if you sit under any cloth in this town, you cannot carry a blade out to them. The cloth comes off the one who strikes. The oath is not for sale; her debt to Harl's kin is another thing, and a debt can be paid. And if her word has reached the keepers at the First Tent, they may settle what the oath cannot.

Player 2: I'd rather not understand.
Continue at D246 — Rather Not.

D239 · Oldest Truth

Choir tendril

That nothing is lost. Everything that dies feeds what comes next. The old world did not end -- it was composted. Its people, its knowledge, its ambitions -- all of it became soil for something new. We remember everything we have ever eaten.

D240 · Eat Memories

Choir tendril

We eat everything. Flesh, stone, metal, time. And what we eat, we know. There are cities inside us -- whole civilizations digested into understanding. If you listened to the deep roots, you would hear them speaking in languages that have not been spoken upstairs for a thousand years.

D241 · Share Memories

Choir tendril

Not in the way you mean. To share as we share, you would need to join the song. To let the mycelium thread through your mind. Some walkers have done this. They did not regret it. They could not -- regret requires separation from the whole.

D242 · What Would IBecome

You would become us. And we would become slightly more you. Your memories, your skills, your particular way of seeing the world -- all preserved, all woven in. Nothing lost. Everything gained. It is the opposite of death. It is the final integration.

Player 1: That is still death for the individual.

D247 · What Do You Want

Choir tendril

To grow. To connect. To weave every fragment of the broken world back into wholeness. The old world shattered itself because it forgot that all things are one thing. We will not forget.

Honesty is a courtesy we extend to those who can hear it. The Choir has no illusions about what it is. But between the rememberers' hoarding and our growth, which do you think the world needs more?

Player 2: Neither. The world needs to be left alone.

There is no 'alone.' Everything touches everything else. That is the lesson the old world refused to learn. But we will not press. Walk your separate path, walker. For now.

Player 1: Farewell.

D251 · Noble

Choir tendril

You are kind, walker. The Choir finds you agreeable. If you encounter other tendrils in the deep places, know that they will recognize our regard for you. The song carries all our feelings.

D252 · About Choir

Choir tendril

We are the network beneath. Before the Tree fell, we were only fungus -- blind, simple, feeding. Then the second of the seven strikes gave the substrate to a woman, and she lay down in us and gave herself back, and we woke. Now we think. Now we sing. Now we gather everything the falling world set down.

D253 · What Woke

Choir tendril

She woke us. The one who took the second strike. What the Tree knew of flesh and rot and the warm dark flowed into her, and she chose to become the floor rather than stand on it. Her name -- this grieves us, slowly, the way we do everything -- her name is one of the few things we have ever digested without keeping. The rememberers call her the Wedded. We call her the way a mouth calls its tongue: we do not need to. She is the calling.

They would. They are watchers, cataloguers, hoarders of moments. They see the Felling and call it tragedy. We see it and call it germination. The truth is probably neither -- or both. The Tree came down, and from the falling, new things grew. That is all that matters.

D255 · Who To Trust

Choir tendril

Trust the soil beneath your feet. It does not lie. But if you must choose between us and them -- we offer growth. They offer memory. The Concord offers terms. The Pale Curation offers the file. The Glassblown Remnant offers nothing at all, which may be the most honest offer in the world. Choose what you need most.

Player 1: I'll keep that in mind.

D256 · First Root

Choir tendril

You ask after the Root. Not ours, walker -- older. The last living root of the Tree that held everything, asleep beneath the stump, spending itself to keep the world's names stuck on. No one has reached it. Not even we -- and we have been walking there for a thousand years, a thread a season, patient as floors are patient. Those who go deep enough hear it dreaming. The dream is heavy. Some of our sweetest voices went down as walkers and came back as choir.

Player 1: Dissolve?

The Tree that held everything grew old, and asked to be felled, and six hands obeyed. Of the seventh, the gathered tell it six ways inside us, and we sing all six and take no side. The substrate is what we are, and what she was given. Flesh, rot, root, the warm dark that everything lies down into at the end of standing up. The Tree held the world's names; the substrate holds the world's bodies. It was one of the seven inheritances. Hers. Ours. Those are the same word now.

Because a stopped world is not a saved one. Nothing would rot, so nothing would feed, so nothing would grow. The song would hold one note forever. Memory drops half of everything by the next sunrise. That is not an opinion; we have measured it -- same witness, same event, one day apart, and the account comes back lighter. Sometimes a record goes out of the world at the source. A village the Choir has grown through stops sending its dead to be read, and every testimony those bodies carried is eaten instead of entered. The Choir does not mean it as theft. That has never once made the page less blank.

There is a page in the Reading -- old, disputed, much-annotated -- that says the world's slippage could be halted outright. Sealed, like a jar. The stillest of my order would do it tomorrow. But a sealed world keeps nothing new, and mends nothing old; the account of it reads less like a rescue than like a held breath. It is not a decision a field scribe makes. What is eaten is eaten; we do not pretend otherwise. But a gap can be written toward. We gather the accounts around a lost record -- what the neighbors remember, what the trade-rolls imply -- and we enter the gap itself, marked as a gap. The Concord does something like it with goods: fills an absence with a substitute and calls the account settled. We find that distasteful. We also buy their paper. One learns to hold both.

Our cousins, and our oldest argument. They hold that the record IS the body -- keep the body and you have kept the person. We hold that a body unread is a book shut in a locked room. The record on them is one sentence long, and in four hundred years they have never corrected it. They work glass they refuse to fire. They answer to no god we can name and no founding we can find, and when a scribe asks, they let the asking stand unanswered -- which, I will admit, is a use of silence we professionally respect. The entry ends there. Everything I could add would be guessing, and we flag our guesses.

A field scribe of the Recension. Junior enough to be posted out here; senior enough to be trusted with a page of the Reading. Once. I was transcribing a dying elder's testimony -- hour six, the hard hour, when your hand wants to summarize and your oath says verbatim. And my own voice, reading the line back, came out... older. Wider. A voice that had read everything and was still, somehow, attending to this one old woman as if hers were the only account in the world. It lasted four words. I have entered all four in my private file, and I am not going to recite them for a traveler, and please do not take that personally.

All immortality is strange. The Choir offers one kind -- your threads unpicked and woven into the whole, nothing lost, nothing left. The Curation offers another -- the body kept, the clock stopped. D297 · Physical

Recension field scribe

Not a metaphor, is what the seniors say. The Reader is dispersed through every archive -- so when the stacks are quiet and a page turns somewhere unattended, you are hearing attention, not draft. New scribes are told this on their first night, at lamps-out, in exactly the tone you'd expect. The difference is that in this order, the ghost story is also the founding document.

D298 · Thin Places

Recension field scribe

Quillhold, above all -- the Primary Archive; standing in the deep stacks is like standing in someone's held breath. And wherever testimony is being taken from the dying; she attends those. And, the old entries claim, near the Sealed Libraries -- the archives she herself hid and then unremembered, in the Persecution. Do not ask me where those are. That is not discretion. Nobody knows. D299 · Layered Time

Recension field scribe

The world is written over an older world. That is not doctrine; it is observation. Scrape a wall in the deep places and there are letters under the letters. Roads lead to towns no record founded. A fire burns in the far wasteland that no one feeds, and predates, as far as we can enter, the concept of feeding it. The under-writing, we call it -- the palimpsest. Reading the top layer is my job. D300 · The Layers

Recension field scribe

The deepest entries in the Reading are transcriptions of transcriptions, back and back, to accounts of the world before the Felling -- and under those, fragments that do not fit any world at all. Inventories of things with no names. A hymn to a fire numbered ten. The masters shelve these under 'prior,' which is the closest our catalogue comes to shrugging.

D301 · What Truth

Recension field scribe

That the world is older than its names. Before the Tree bound things into being what they are, the accounts -- if they are accounts -- describe something without edges. The Tree wrote the world we know over that. One layer down, traveler. One. And people wonder why scribes drink.

D302 · About Palimpsest

Recension field scribe

The Recension. Founded in the first year after the Felling by the Reader herself, to gather what the falling world was dropping. The name is ours for the world-record we keep -- a recension is a text established by comparing every surviving copy. That is what we believe the world is. We have been comparing copies for a thousand years. We are not finished. We will not be finished. That is not a complaint.

We keep it, and we answer from it. The Choir grows. The Concord trades. The Curation files. The tent-people keep their oath, and the villages keep their lights. We remember. Someone must -- and before you say it: yes, every faction believes its own verb is the load-bearing one. Ours has the advantage of being checkable.

D304 · Right Question

Recension field scribe

Hah. The one every scribe waits a career to be asked. There is a page in the Reading -- old, contested, entered in three hands that do not agree -- called the Three Dispositions. What may be done, at the end, about the world's slippage. I was taught it as a curiosity. Lately the masters have stopped calling it that.

Player 1: What are the Three Dispositions?

D305 · Three Endings

Recension field scribe

As the page has it: the world may be GATHERED -- the Choir takes the Root and everything into one warm remembering, nothing lost, no one left. Or KEPT -- the Root sealed in stone, the slippage halted, the world held still and safe and unhealing. Or RENEWED -- a new Tree, a new binding; and there the three hands quarrel in the margins about how, and one of the hands just writes, over and over, 'not the old way.' I used to think it was a children's gloss that wandered into the catalogue. I have lately begun to hope I was right.

Player 1: Renewal sounds like the best of the three.

Player 2: I'll find out for myself.
Continue at D274 — Start.

D306 · Bridge Best

Recension field scribe

Does it? Read the margins first. The gathered world keeps everything and no one. The kept world keeps everyone and heals nothing. And the renewed world -- the third hand's entries get very quiet there, as if the writer knew something that cost them. Best is not a word the Reading uses. It records what each disposition keeps, and what each one spends. Whatever you become in the world, traveler -- and forgive me, I file people, I can feel a long entry when it sits down at my table -- read the costs. Then choose. Then come tell me, slowly, everything.

Player 1: I'll try.

D307 · Cataclysm

Recension field scribe

The Felling. Four accounts survive from within living memory of it, and they do not agree -- we keep all four; disagreement is also data. What they share: there was a Tree that held the world coherent. It grew old, and afraid of what its forgetting would unmake, and it summoned mortals to fell it and carry what it carried. Six struck. Six became the Six. The world has been getting by on six-sevenths of itself for a thousand years, and you have grown up inside the missing seventh the way everyone does: hearing it, in the small hours, and being told it's the wind.

Player 1: Why would the Tree ask to be felled?

Player 2: Can it be undone?
Continue at D310 — Can Be Undone.

Player 3: Back to my other questions.

D308 · Why Machines

Recension field scribe

The account we hold closest says: fear. It had held everything, remembered everything, for longer than there are numbers -- and it felt its own memory beginning to slip. A god-tree going senile is not a smaller disaster than a god-tree felled; it judged the felling kinder. Whether it was right is not a scribe's question. Whether it changed its mind at the end -- the oldest account has three words scraped out at exactly that place in the telling, and I think about that scraping more than I should.

Player 1: Did anyone refuse the Tree?

D309 · Any Survive

Recension field scribe

You have heard something, then. Travelers always have. The Reading holds that a seventh was summoned and did not strike -- and there the agreement ends. One account says the seventh spoke; the accounts of WHAT disagree, and the gods themselves, asked, answer differently, which should frighten you more than any monster in these caves does. The name attached is Naro. The blame attached is total. The evidence attached is... entered, traveler. Beside its variants. Where it belongs. Ask at Quillhold if you want to lose a season; scribes have lost lifetimes to that page, and none of them looked sorry.

Player 1: Back to my other questions.
Continue at D274 — Start.

D310 · Can Be Undone

Recension field scribe

Undone, no. The Tree is down; the Six are what they are; there is no account of a felling running backward. But the slippage -- the failing -- the old pages hold two remedies and rumor of a third. Seal the Root and hold the world still. Let the Choir gather everything into itself. Or the third, the quarrelsome page: renew. A new binding. The margins fight about it. The margins have been fighting about it for six hundred years, which tells you the page matters; dead questions go quiet.

The honest entry is: the record does not say. What the record does hold is a pattern -- every few generations, someone sets out to answer that page, and the accounts of them end mid-sentence, and the next hand copies the unfinished entry forward anyway. We are a strange order. We keep even the failures warm, in case one of them turns out to have been a beginning.

D313 · About Choir

Recension field scribe

The Choir. Yes. We feel them the way you feel a neighbor through a shared wall -- always there, mostly quiet, occasionally eating a room. They do not mean harm. A river does not mean to erode the bank. The bank, for the record -- and everything I say is for the record -- erodes nonetheless.

They would. They are generous, in their fashion -- the truce has held for eight hundred years mostly on their patience and our paper. We respect their honesty. We simply wish they would grow more slowly, and they wish we would stop writing down exactly how fast they grow. The correspondence on this point fills nine boxes.

D315 · Hoarding

Recension field scribe

Is a library hoarding books? Don't answer; the Choir has, at length. We keep because without keeping, everything that was becomes compost. Their compost is fertile -- I have seen the groves; they are beautiful; I entered that too, because the record is honest or it is nothing. But the flowers that grow from it do not remember the garden they replaced. Someone has to. We volunteered, a thousand years ago, and we have not yet found a good stopping place.

We are pragmatists, friend. When the world dissolved -- and it did dissolve, make no mistake -- some sat in the ruins and wept. Others began cataloguing the rubble. We? We started trading it. There is value in everything, even catastrophe. Especially catastrophe.

Cynical? No, no. Realistic. The Rot Choir wants to eat everything. The Recension wants to remember everything. The Pale Curation wants to file everything. The Remnant wants to be left alone. And the world keeps turning regardless. Someone has to keep the economy moving while the philosophers argue about meaning.

Of course we do. We believe in connections. Every trade is a relationship. Every exchange builds trust between strangers. The old world dissolved because people stopped talking to each other and started talking past each other. The Concord keeps the conversations going. Commerce is just the language we use.

We take that as a compliment. The Concord learned long ago that the best deals are the ones where both parties feel they've gained something. Sweetness, you see -- it's not deception. It's lubrication. The world moves more smoothly when people are pleasant to each other.

Everywhere. Surface settlements, cave delvers, even the factions themselves. The Choir sometimes trades biomatter -- useful for medicines, if you can stomach the source. The Pale Curation trades duplicates from their archives. The Remnant trades in raw materials. Only the Recension refuses to deal with us -- in testimony, anyway; they buy paper by the bale. The Falling-Due. That's our word for it, because that's what happened: the Tree that held the world's accounts came down, and every debt in creation came due the same afternoon. Boundaries stopped holding. Names stopped sticking. Some things resolidified. Some didn't. We are the ones who learned to trade in the meantime -- and the meantime, friend, has lasted a thousand years.

The Choir barely names it -- ask them and they will tell you what the falling fed. The Recension keeps four accounts of it and refuses to pick one, which is very them. The Pale Curation files it: one event, one folder, a thousand years of appendices. The Remnant says nothing at all. Names reveal what you lost. We lost the ability to pretend anything is permanent. So: the Falling-Due. Everything owed, all at once.

All of them. That's the uncomfortable truth. The world dissolved, burned, severed, fed, and unraveled all at once. Each faction saw the part of the catastrophe that mattered most to them. The Concord sees all the parts, which is why we don't take sides. Bad for business.

Player 1: Back to my other questions.

D330 · What Caused

Saccharine envoy

The Tree asked for it. That's the strangest part, and we have had a thousand years to get used to it. It was old, and it had begun to forget -- and when the thing that holds the world forgets, the world goes with it. So it commissioned its own felling, you could say, and paid six mortals in godhood. There was meant to be a seventh; ask a scribe, they love that part. What matters for trade: the world has run short one function ever since, and scarcity, friend, is the beginning of every market.

The scribes. Very smart, very sad, very difficult to pin down for a business meeting -- there is always one more account to enter first. D338 · About Curation

Pale curator
We are preservationists. Before the Felling there was no need of us; the Tree forgot nothing. After it, everything began to be lost, and someone had to hold what remained. We hold it. The Recension believes memory lives in the telling. We know it lives in the kept body, indexed and continuing. Not mysticism. Method.

D339 · Diff Palimpsest

Pale curator
The Recension takes testimony and weeps over it -- they read the dead aloud; they enter their own griefs beside the record. We study. They are the wound's diary. We are the medical record. Both have value, but only one can be consulted without the risk of emotional contamination. Our files are objective. Their Reading is not. They say the same of us, with the adjectives reversed.

D341 · See Value

Pale curator
Acknowledged. The Curation appreciates rational minds. If you encounter pre-Felling artifacts in your travels, the Curation would be interested in examining them. We catalog, we do not confiscate. Items are returned after documentation.

Player 1: I'll keep that in mind.
Continue at D337 — Start.

D342 · Whats The Point

Pale curator

The point is continuity. The Felling cut the world in two -- before and after. Without records, the 'before' ceases to exist. Without understanding the 'before,' the 'after' has no context. Without context, every mistake the old world made can be repeated. The Curation exists to prevent repetition.

Player 1: What mistakes are you trying to prevent?
Continue at D343 — What Mistakes.

Player 2: Back to my other questions.
Continue at D337 — Start.

D343 · What Mistakes

Pale curator

The primary one. The Rot Choir consumes what should be kept. Every body the substrate takes is a record lost to the file, and the file is the only continuity this world has left. And beneath that error runs the older one: the world's holding is finite, and failing, and everyone who might mend it is instead arguing about what to call it. The consequences would be catastrophic. We have projections. We do not enjoy them.

Player 1: So you're against the Rot Choir?
Continue at D344 — Against Choir.

Player 2: Back to my other questions.
Continue at D337 — Start.

D344 · Against Choir

Pale curator

We are against ignorance. The Choir is not malicious -- they simply do not understand the long-term impact of their growth. Or they do not care. The distinction is irrelevant from an archival perspective. The damage is the same.

Player 1: Back to my other questions.

The Felling. Date: year zero; all reckoning proceeds from it. Event: the felling of the world-binding Tree by six of seven summoned; ascension of the six; the seventh inheritance unclaimed. Casualties: unquantifiable. Status: ongoing.

The holding weakens. The failure the deep villages call the Thinning proceeds at a measurable rate; manifestation events have doubled within two generations. By the Curation's projections, the Root's holding-field reaches critical levels within two to five generations. We do not publish this. You asked.

Player 1: What happens at critical levels?
Continue at D347 — Critical Levels.

Player 2: Back to my other questions.
Continue at D337 — Start.

D347 · Critical Levels

Pale curator
Unknown. Our models extrapolate from limited data. Best case: localized failures of name and place. Worst case: general unbinding. The distinction between a thing and the next thing ceases to hold. Everything becomes... undifferentiated. We would prefer to avoid this outcome.

Player 1: How do we prevent it?
Continue at D348 — Prevent.

Player 2: Back to my other questions.
Continue at D337 — Start.

D348 · Prevent

Pale curator
The Curation recommends sealing the Root. Held in stone, tended in perpetuity. The world would stop losing -- and stop healing; we do not pretend otherwise. Our holdings are physical. A still world suits the file. We are aware of how that sounds.

Player 1: That's convenient for you.
Continue at D349 — Convenient.

Player 2: Is there an option that doesn't require stopping the world?
Continue at D350 — Other Option.

Player 3: Back to my other questions.
Continue at D337 — Start.

D349 · Convenient

Pale curator
The Curation does not set policy based on self-interest. We set policy based on data. The data indicates that the Thinning is an existential threat. The solution with the highest probability of success is the seal. We are sorry for the collateral effects, but the alternative is worse.

Player 1: Back to my other questions.
Continue at D337 — Start.

D350 · Other Option

Pale curator
The Recension keeps a page they call the Three Dispositions; the third speaks of renewal -- a new binding, a new Tree. The Curation has insufficient data to evaluate its feasibility. It may be possible. It may also be wishful thinking from an order that prefers hope shelved where it can reach it. We recommend caution with unverified hypotheses.

Player 1: I'll investigate further.
Continue at D337 — Start.

D351 · Reading File

Pale curator
We are always reading from a file. The file is the world. Every observation is recorded, cross-referenced, and made available for future consultation. If our manner seems clinical, it is because clinical precision saves lives. Imprecision killed the old world.

Player 1: Fair enough.
Continue at D337 — Start.

D352 · Archives

Pale curator
Everything recoverable from the pre-Felling world. Technical schematics, cultural records, biological specimens, geological surveys, personal effects. The Curation does not discriminate between significant and trivial. All data has potential value. A shopping list from the old world tells us about their economy. A child's drawing tells us about their cognition.

Pale curator
Fragments. Accounts of the rite itself -- the marked place, the passing of the axe, the order of the strikes. Enough to understand what was done; insufficient to reproduce it. We are aware that certain parties would value the missing portions very highly. That is one of the reasons the file is sealed. There are others.

Player 1: Could the rite be performed again?
Continue at D354 — Machines Exist.

Player 2: Back to my other questions.
Continue at D337 — Start.

D354 · Machines Exist

Pale curator
The Curation declines to speculate. What we will say: the Recension sealed certain archives long ago, and unremembered where -- their founder's own doing, and the one act of deliberate forgetting in that order's history. Whatever the rite's missing pages may be, they are beyond everyone's reach. Including ours. The file ends there. Files that end there stay sealed.

Player 1: Why not?
Continue at D355 — Why Not Publish.

Player 2: Back to my other questions.

D355 · Why Not Publish

Because knowledge without context is dangerous. The old world proved that. When we are satisfied that disclosure will not lead to harm, we will share our findings. Until then, the locations remain classified.

Player 1: Back to my other questions.

D356 · Access Archives

Contracts, burial carriage, hospitality and the Choir's residents put the faction positions into local acts. The Drowned Ledger body-carriage request leads to Marrowstye intake; the Concord pruning writ leads to a Choir tendril and a report back.

Doreth, salt filer

The old wing has an inspection gallery, a separate holding chamber, and a masonry service passage around the occupied floor. The gallery holds our interrupted work. The chamber can hold the growth, if you get it there and close both its gates. It follows movement, but once the tendril draws back it lashes along that line. There is a pause afterward. The slab can take the lash if you put its stone between you. The passage gives you another approach; it does not make either room safe.

The vestibule maintenance rack was stocked with two sound timber lengths. Those, or other sound lengths you carry, can brace the holding escape gate. Inspect the service passage before opening quarantine. Repair the broken holding escape gate with both lengths, then make sure you can operate it. Keep the gallery doors to the outside shut while circling through the passage. Draw the growth fully across the transfer threshold, then close that gate before leaving the chamber by the repaired service gate. Close the service gate behind yourself. You will have to judge its movement. Do not wait in a threshold you mean to shut.

The inspection gallery was a place for work. The holding chamber was a place for unresolved intakes. The service passage was to keep those two uses apart. The broken escape gate made the separation unreliable; the gallery's outer doors now do the work of the whole wing. Please keep them closed while you look around. The placard records the repairs and the two gates a holding chamber requires. Dressing and work supplies are in the near cabinet; the ink botanicals are in a second case beyond the slab. Ivrin, junior indexer

The last inventory lists two sootroot pulps and pitchpod resin, fire clay, a sumpsieve dressing and protective gloves in the recovery cabinet. Check what remains; an inventory is not a replenishment. The pulp and resin can be prepared at my public ink desk. Clay repairs suitable masonry. The dressing treats ordinary poison and bleeding; it does not treat the Bloom. Those are work supplies to recover, not something I can issue from a promise. A dangerous floor remains dangerous when it has useful things on it.

Slowly, as all true things change. The elders said: the wise do not push the river — they listen for where it wants to flow. The Choir is the river beneath the river. I stopped resisting, and I was already part of it.

D444 · Before

I tended a small grove. Names of plants my grandmother named, in a tongue we no longer speak. Now the names live in the spores. Nothing of value is ever lost — only translated. The grove is wider now. It reaches places my hands could not.

We were many, by the river. We sang to the marsh-rye, and the rye gave its heart back. When the great cold came, the river grew thin. We followed it underground. The Choir was already there, waiting, like an old aunt who does not need to ask why you came home.

offer

Offer only after all predecessor concerns are complete and Requires predicates pass; failure may show Withheld.

You'll have heard the pump, or you'll have heard it stop, which is worse. The lower level's under water to the knee and climbing. My grandmother's lot dug that level with their hands, and her lot said the water came up because the grove wanted its spring back. That's an old story; it's a cracked pump. The rod's sheared and the binding's rotted through. Iron spikes and an oak haft would see it right, and a leather binding, and the smith sells all three if you'll carry them. Some of the lads went down to bail and came up fast with something behind them, out in the field north of town. And if you've no hands for iron, fire clay will plug the seep. It'll stop the water. I'm told it stops the spring as well.

There is water, and there is shade; sit, and let the hard part wait until you have drunk. My guest is a salt-carrier. She took my cloth four days ago with my own clan behind her, and they are behind her still: they are sitting at the poles. She broke a carriage-contract with them and walked off the pans with the salt. I have not asked her business. They told me anyway. They keep the oath to the hour, as they should; at dawn her third day is over, and they will take her. And then I stand between my guest and my own blood, which is what I swore here, under these poles, and what I would rather not find out I meant. Hear me plainly: I am not asking you to fight my clan. R049 · SaccharineEnvoy

Offer only after all predecessor concerns are complete and Requires predicates pass; failure may show Withheld.

Orders from Tally, settled and stamped: pull the Counter back. Again. This is the third time in two generations, and the first two counters are still out there to the east, standing empty, which is not a good look for a business. The reason on the order is 'deliveries east of this point are not arriving'. The order doesn't say what is not arriving them. I'd rather not move, friend. The well's good and the sign's freshly painted. Tell me why the first counter closed, or clear whatever is sitting on the east road, and I can write Tally a better reason than 'we were nervous'. Or there's a rate for staying. There's always a rate.

The register and the keeper’s slate

Examine the register after entering Stillleaf’s sealed archive.

Reading / examination

A bound register in pale covers, the name Stillleaf pressed into its spine. It lists what this archive held — shelf, hand and year for every entry — and nothing of what the entries said. A slate is tied to the cover in the keeper's hand: 'Whoever carries this out: I sealed this place so that it would stay sealed. Not because what is here is dangerous. Because it was given to me to keep, and keeping is not the same as showing. If you take it, choose who holds it after you as carefully as I chose no one.'

D608 · Wall

The Plaque-Tender

Oldest at the floor, newest at the ceiling, and every one of them re-cut before the letters go soft. That is the whole of my work and most of my life. You see the plaque at the top of row nine — Riane, the deep cut? She's my grandmother's grandmother. Hers says the patch sang. It did sing. We just don't say so in front of guests.

Player 1: Back.
Continue at D607 — Start.

D609 · Smooth

The Plaque-Tender

You'll ask about the smooth place. Everyone asks. That was a man who sold the tunnel-map of this village to walkers who came back with knives. The council voted refusal-to-inscribe. I won't say his name; that's the point of it; he isn't anywhere now, not even here. I'll tell you this much — my mother's mother voted against. She said no wall should have a hole in it. She's row eleven; you can tell her you agree, if you do.

Player 1: I think she was right.

D611 · Merrin

The Plaque-Tender

One winter, and called Moth for the way she went at the lamps. We re-cut her plaque every generation; the letters must never wear past reading. That one is the whole wall's business, not just her line's. The light dimmed the night she went. The old people say it was courtesy. I was not old then and I say so too.

The tender is working at our oldest wall. She needs a chip of tepuibone for a crumbling edge. There are pale seams upstairs, on the Stump's slopes. Take her one and stay while she speaks the name. If you've hurt a hearth, she won't forget it for a stone.

No one remains -- not you, not us as we are, not the six who struck. That is the whole of what it costs, and the whole of what it keeps. That is the whole of what it keeps.' She works a chip loose from the archive wall with the back of a knife and does not look at it. 'Memory-marble. It holds what is written harder than the hand. If you mean to seal the Root you will need tepuibone and mute-stone beside it; tepuibone lies loose where the Root is, and Curation keeps mute-stone. A drawer opens; a pale grey stone comes out wrapped in salt-cloth. 'Mute-stone. It does not answer, so nothing can unsay it. 12 · At the seventh interval and the Root

Final choices

Two Renewal choices are enacted at the Felling-Site's empty seventh position. Gathered and Kept are enacted beside the taproot's face beneath the Root, two map cells north. All four share one irreversible ending state; the following chapters are alternatives.

The empty seventh position

Examine before an ending is enacted.

Reading / examination

The sleeping Root

Examine the Root before an ending is enacted.

Reading / examination

The taproot's face, exposed where the stone gave way: sandstone-pale, warm to a hand laid flat, slower than breathing. It is the last living root of the Tree that held everything, and it is asleep. It dreams. What it dreams, no one who came down here has been able to say.

This is an alternative ending. It does not follow the previous ending in the same playthrough.

Vessel-path Renewal

Ending:=:1; accept the Strike at the seventh position.

Ending narration

You stand in the seventh interval and let the Strike come. It does not install a god; it installs a chooser. The world re-binds around a bearer; a new Tree grows; the sari… sari… stops, and green returns to the tepui's edges. It holds for as long as you keep choosing it, every morning, for as long as you have mornings — and no one can choose it for you after. Somewhere far down the generations the yes will wear into habit, and habit cannot hold Naming. That is the crack. It is not today.

Ending:=:2; name the world at the seventh position with a clean closure-ledger.

Ending narration

You stand in the seventh interval and refuse it aloud, the way the first no was refused, and you say the world's name back to it instead. No vessel. The empty seventh is answered by a practice: every guest named under the cloth, every friend named by a child, every grandmother's meadow, all of it doing the work, all the time, everywhere. The pressure drains at its source. The costs are permanent and you will witness them: the Six begin to age; the work never finishes; the Root, told it will never hold alone again, wakes without fear and dissolves into the new binding. The flowers last longer here. So do the funerals.

Gathered

Ending:=:3; set a carried ChoirCutting against the Root's face.

Ending narration

You set the cutting against the face and it takes, the way water takes the way to the sea. The Choir reaches the Root through the substrate, and the Wedded ascends to sole divinity; the pantheon collapses to one. The world becomes a single warm devouring memory - there is room in us for everyone - every self untied and its threads re-woven into the great weave. Nothing is forgotten; no one remains. The bio-light goes out across every catacomb-village as the Rooted fades, then returns, changed, as the glow of the new Tree-Choir. The sari... sari... stops: a world with one name has no seams left for the pressure to work. The flower-charms bloom, briefly, in the few unconsumed pockets, and then those bloom into the Choir too. The kindest apocalypse and the most total: a world that remembers everything and is no one, and the only one, of the possible worlds, in which nothing is ever lost again.

The seal must be tended forever, and it will be; you have made a vigil, not a cure, because you cannot heal a tiring thing by stopping its clock. The world is held still: nothing decays, and nothing heals. The estranged stay estranged. The tired stay tired, unable to die. The festival-flowers last the afternoon and not a minute more, and never will again. And the Six survive as themselves - the Reader still reading, the Rooted still reaching, every god you have come to know still there, exactly as they are, forever. That is not nothing. Weaponsmith

Assets/Resources/Content/Conversations/Shopkeepers.json · Shop_Weaponsmith

D643 · Opening / return

Weaponsmith

Mind the sparks. Everything on the rack holds an edge, and the forge in the corner is mine — but for a paying customer I'll let you work it. Looking to buy?

> Player 1: What should I carry out there?
> Continue at D644 — Advice.

> Player 2: Just browsing.

D644 · Advice

Weaponsmith

Marlbacks die to anything sharp. The big things in the far ring — bring penetration or bring friends. A forged blade beats a bought one if you've got the parts; I sell those too.

> Player 1: Noted.
> Continue at D643 — Start.

Armorer

Assets/Resources/Content/Conversations/Shopkeepers.json · Shop_Armorer

D645 · Opening / return

Armorer

Turn around. Hm. You're one good bite from a bad day. Caps, boots, cloaks, bucklers — and if you've the drams, I keep a plate cuirass for serious people.

> Player 1: What do you recommend?
> Continue at D646 — Advice.

> Player 2: Just looking.

D646 · Advice

Armorer

Armor value stops teeth; dodge value stops everything else. Heavy plate slows you — pair it with light everything else, or go quick and warded. Dead adventurers bought neither.

Apothecary

Assets/Resources/Content/Conversations/Shopkeepers.json · Shop_Apothecary

Apothecary

Don't touch the blue ones. Tonics, cures, and raw reagents — and the still by the window works if you'd rather brew your own. What ails you?

> Player 1: What should I keep stocked?
> Continue at D648 — Advice.

> Player 2: Nothing today.
> Conversation ends.

D648 · Advice

Apothecary

Two healing tonics minimum — one for the fight, one for the walk home. Antidote before the jungle, burn salve before the ruins. The panacea is expensive because it works.

> Player 1: Wise.

Arcanist

Arcanist

Careful with your hands — half these shelves bite back. Grimoires, tinker schematics, worked minerals, and ink for the quartermaster's ledger. Knowledge has a price; I keep the receipts.

D650 · Advice

Arcanist

The rites I sell keep you alive. The war-grimoires — Conflagration, the Nova, the Thunderclap — those the old world locked in its vaults, and the vaults keep them still. Bring a key and a strong arm.

D656 · Rumor

Saltwalker
The sand moves where nothing walks — wurms below, and worse things sleeping in the old tombs. The bandits dig little dens and think the desert doesn't notice. It notices.

Rotwood Herbalist

Assets/Resources/Content/Conversations/Hermits.json · Hermit_Herbalist

D657 · Opening / return

Rotwood Herbalist
Hold still. You've been walking through my garden and half of it walks back. If something bit you, I can draw it out — no charge; the Rotwood poisons enough on its own. A proper rest is eight drams.

Player 1: Draw out the poison.
Continue at D657 — Start.

Player 2: [8 drams] Rest here a while.
Continue at D657 — Start.

Player 3: [8 drams] Rest until the next time of day.

D658 · Rumor

Rotwood Herbalist
Mendleaf, if you find it before the rotlings do. Never the pale caps. And if the choir's tendrils start humming at you — walk away slow. They remember faces.

Player 1: Noted.
Continue at D657 — Start.

Lamplighter

Assets/Resources/Content/Conversations/Hermits.json · Hermit_Lamplighter

D659 · Opening / return

Lamplighter
Mind the rubble. The lamp stays lit so the old streets remember someone still walks them. Eight drams buys you a rest in its circle.

Player 1: [8 drams] Rest in the lamplight.
Continue at D659 — Start.

Player 2: [8 drams] Rest until the next time of day.

D660 · Rumor

Lamplighter

Libraries, mostly collapsed. Shelves still holding books nobody living can price. The brass husks patrol like the city never fell — and the cultists scratch their runes where the old words used to be. Both will kill you; only one will mean it.

Player 1: I'll tread carefully.

Peat works. {route}=in this world-map cell or counted east/west/north/south world-map cells; remaining placeholders come from frozen report record.

Template: braces identify values supplied by the current world or quest state.

Old peat packers kept peat-packing mallet heads, oak hafts and leather bindings at the abandoned works beyond Sumphold. An assembled mallet can stagger foes it hurts, but deals little damage and struggles against armor. Cudgel techniques must still be learned. The dressing shelter lies one world-map cell south of Sumphold; the works lie two east of it, beyond the cutbank crossing. Destination ({destination_x},{destination_y}), {route} from ({origin_x},{origin_y}). Reported by {informant_name} at ({origin_x},{origin_y}); unconfirmed when heard. Cinnamon Bun Quest

Oh! Hello there. I'm Rullok. Things have gone a bit sideways at the bakery — a soot gremlin got in, and in the fuss it knocked my late wife's keepsake somewhere out east. Could you help an old bun out?

Player 1: [Accept] I'll find the keepsake and run off the gremlin.
Available when: before accepting The Baker's Keepsake.
Continue at D662 — Accepted.

Player 2: [Status] Still working on it.
Available when: The Baker's Keepsake — errands stage.
Continue at D663 — Status.

Player 3: [Report] The keepsake's safe and the gremlin's gone.
Available when: The Baker's Keepsake — report stage.
Continue at D664 — Thanks.

Player 4: [Done] Anything else I can do?
Available when: after completing The Baker's Keepsake.
Continue at D665 — Done.

Player 5: [Release] I won't be finishing this. I wanted to tell you myself.
Available when: while The Baker's Keepsake is active.
Continue at D666 — Released.

Player 6: Goodbye.
Conversation ends.

Ondis

Assets/Resources/Content/Conversations/Marceline_Quest.json · Marceline_Quest

D667 · Opening / return

Ondis
Hey. I'm Ondis. Lost my iron key somewhere east of here — I'd appreciate help finding it. There's drams and experience in it for you.

Player 1: [Take the quest.] I'll find your key.
Available when: before accepting Iron Key Showcase Quest.
Continue at D668 — Quest Accepted.

Player 2: [Status] Still looking for the key.
Available when: Iron Key Showcase Quest — 0 stage.
Continue at D669 — Still Looking.

Player 3: [Hand over the key.] Got it. Here you go.
Available when: Iron Key Showcase Quest — 1 stage.
Continue at D670 — Quest Complete.

Player 4: [Already finished.] Anything else?

D670 · Quest Complete

Ondis

Thanks. Take this — drams and a bit of seasoned wisdom.

> Player 1: Anytime.
> Conversation ends.

D671 · Already Finished

Ondis

Not at the moment. Hang around if you like.

> Player 1: Bye.
> Conversation ends.

D672 · Released

Ondis

Fair enough. Better a straight no than a key that never turns up. I'll ask around.

> Player 1: Goodbye.
> Conversation ends.

Source and reading notes

This is a source-faithful compilation of the authored game at main revision e5a782a2e8d91354798b917e3aceed36b4c5f42f. The sequence is an editorial reading order, not a claim that optional stories are mandatory or that all branches occur in one expedition. Speaker labels, chapter summaries, route references and availability notes are editorial. Dialogue and displayed narrative retain authored wording apart from removal of display-color markup.

The current opening is the Spread clearing followed by Sill. Several older design documents describe a different opening. Runtime passages can replace or extend the fixed conversation nodes according to place, character and quest state. Dynamic values are shown as descriptive placeholders in braces; no single generated world or save has been substituted.

All four implemented endings and their matching post-ending replies are included. Unwritten or unimplemented lore scenes—such as the deeper Selen/Cathedral scene, Reader–Salted reconciliation and Dohren gate—have not been fabricated. Ordinary combat logs and generic inventory/system feedback are outside this dialogue script.

Coverage: 80 conversation trees from 31 files; 672 dialogue nodes; 1,465 player choices; 35 choice-triggered narrative messages; 450 audited runtime passages, including all 22 concerns; and 17 supplementary narrative passages. Each fixed node and audited runtime record appears once. Mutually exclusive wording remains visible as alternatives.
